3rd Royal Tank Regiment at Goodwood

“Through mud and blood to the green fields beyond” – Motto of Royal Tank Corps

Scenario Overview

Operation Goodwood was an attempt by the British, Canadian and Polish forces to breakout from around the strategic city of Caen. The attack on July 18th was to be a tightly focused punch by some 750 tanks to the east of Caen, from the narrow base established by the 6th Airborne, over the Orne, across cornfields, over two railway lines and up towards the well defended ridge at Bourguebus. On the 18th July, preceded by a massive bombing and artillery bombardment, three armoured divisions drove hard for the objective. The lead armoured division was 11th Armoured with its regiments in line astern, led by 3rd Royal Tank Regiment’s Shermans. Assigned the right flank of the offensive, 3 RTR must advance beyond the devastated front line units into the heart of the German defences and take Bourguebus ridge before the Germans of 21st Armoured Division can organise and respond. The scene is set for the largest British tank action of the war.

Yellow areas are tall crops
Briefing for Colonel David Silvertop – 3rd Royal Tank Regiment, 11th Armoured Division

Today is the day when you can finally demonstrate the power of mass armour in open country. For the past six weeks since landing in Normandy your regiment has been parcelled out in penny packets to support the infantry in the close bocage country inland from the invasion beaches. The fighting was costly both to attackers and defenders.

Now you have assembled at in the narrow Orne bridgehead to lead a massive breakout by three armoured divisions (11th, 7th and Guards) through the thin screen of German defenders to your south. Your regiment is the “sabre” regiment, right at the front of the nine armoured regiments in the Operation Goodwood offensive.

Your mission is to advance as rapidly as possible to advance down the corridor and take the villages on the edge of the ridge ahead. Speed is absolutely vital as the other regiments cannot advance until you are clear. You are therefore under strict orders to get forward as fast as possible and avoid getting sidetracked engaging forces that can be dealt with by the following waves.

At 5.00am this morning, 1,000 RAF bombers planes plastered the forward defences, followed by another wave containing a similar number from the USAF. At 7.45am the preparatory artillery barrage began to soften the defences further. Unfortunately, some of the shells fell short, killing and wounding some of your tankers, including the commander of C Squadron, Major Peter Burr.

As you advanced you found the defenders shell-shocked, demoralised and in incapable of resistance and your carrier platoon was able to simply round them up. As a result, the first two miles were made rapidly and without loss. However, the defenders are now starting to come to life, mortar fire is becoming a nuisance and previously suppressed anti-tank guns are starting to open up.

Now is the time to lead your regiment to glory and the beckoning ridge beyond

Objective:
Reach the Caen-Falaise road by exiting off the southern board edge
Briefing for Major Hans von Luck – 125 Panzergrenadier Regiment, 21st Panzer Division

This was not the return to your unit that you expected. Returning overnight from a visit to Paris to see your fiancée, you arrived at your headquarters at 9.00am looking forward to a good breakfast and a change out of your dress uniform. Instead you were greeted by ashen faced staff panicking that thousands of bombers had obliterated the regiment.

Communications with your forces being cut off you set off to locate the forward units only to find the area swarming with British tanks. This is clearly a major offensive and your war-weary regiment lies in the way. Re-establishing contact and urging your men to stand fast, you hope that your thinly stretched line can hold back the British tide long enough for re-enforcements to arrive.

Objective: Inflict maximum damage on the British forces and prevent the British from exiting off the southern board edge

Scenario Notes
This scenario is designed to recreate the challenges of the Goodwood battle for both players. For the British commander, the order of the day is to press on as fast as possible down the long table as multiple armoured brigades are following up behind. But the lack of infantry and artillery make it difficult to silence the guns sniping at flanks and rear.
For the German commander, the challenge is to harass and delay the British armoured juggernaut long enough for reserves to be brought up to contain the advance.
